THE GRAND JURY CHARGES:

INTRODUCTION

GROUP 31 PRISON GANG, also known as “LOS TIBURONES”

1. The Group 31 Prison Gang (hereinafter “Group 31”), whose members are known as Los Tiburones (“the Sharks”) was formally created in 1988. Group 31’s founding members registered the non-profit corporation with the Puerto Rico Department of State under the name “G31-Octubre-1988 Tiburones Inc.” Group 31’s symbol is a shark fin.
2. The incorporation documents indicate that Group 31 objectives were: a) to establish and promote communication with the Puerto Rico Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation, the Legislative Assembly, and the Executive Branch; b) to seek better equal opportunities for each inmate to improve the quality of life within the Correctional System of Puerto Rico; and c) promote moral and social rehabilitation in accordance with the ideals enshrined in the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico and its laws. Notwithstanding these stated objectives, current practice and activities of Group 31 within the Puerto Rico prison system involves significant criminal activity, including violence, drug trafficking, and money laundering.

3. Group 31 established a series of “norms” or “rules” that members were expected to follow. However, the establishment of certain rules and norms did not preclude Group 31, during the timeframe relevant to this Indictment, from: a) controlling the distribution of illegal substances in several institutions, resulting in serious bodily injury and multiple overdose deaths; b) establishing a Group 31 disciplinary system that included severe beatings of inmates; c) establishing government liaisons for the purpose of reducing prison sentences; d) mandating political affiliations and directing prisoners who to vote for in primary and general elections; e) obtaining preferential treatment from the prison staff within the institutions; and f) smuggling cellular phones and other prohibited items into the institutions where they were being housed.

4. Group 31 established and maintained control of significant illegal substances distribution at numerous institutions operated by the Puerto Rico Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation. Those institutions included, but were not limited to: a) Institucion Correccional Guerrero, Aguadilla; b) Complejo Correccional Las Cucharas Sgto. Pedro Joel Rodriguez Matos, Ponce; c) Institución Correccional Bayamon (501); and d) Institución Correccional Guayama Maxima Seguridad (1000).

5. Group 31 established and followed a leadership structure within the correctional institutions. The principal leader of Group 31 was called the Maximum Leader. Serving beneath the Maximum Leader were Module Leaders who managed Group 31's day-to-day activities within the prison module where they resided. Within each module were Security Leaders, who, along with other Group 31 members, were in charge of "security" and discipline within the modules. Also serving within the modular leadership structure were Orderlies, who were in charge of the illegal substance distribution within the modules where they resided.

6. To distribute illegal substances within the institutions, members of Group 31 relied on close associates in the free community to complete tasks essential to the enterprise. These associates, several of whom are charged herein, worked with and for Group 31 with full knowledge of the illegal purpose of their actions. The roles played by these associates on the outside included, but were not limited to: a) purchasing the illegal substances distributed in the institutions; b) packaging the illegal substances distributed in the institutions; c) arranging for the smuggling of the illegal substances into the institutions through various methods; d) collecting payments for the illegal substances; and e) conducting financial transactions to further the financial interests of the enterprise.

7. Group 31 trafficked multiple illegal substances within the institutions they controlled. Those included, but were not limited to: a) fentanyl; b) suboxone; c) heroin; d) cocaine; e) marijuana; and f) synthetic marijuana. Group 31 received its supply of narcotics from several sources, including members of other prison gangs (i.e.

Los 25) who were housed in some of the same institutions as Group 31 members.

8. Group 31 successfully smuggled the illegal substances into these institutions utilizing several methods. One of the principal smuggling methods involved using unmanned aerial vehicles (hereinafter “drones”) that carried packages containing the illegal substances. The drones would be remotely navigated by pilots, who frequently carried firearms to protect themselves and the illegal substances. Pilots would drop the packages containing illegal substances within the prison grounds where they would be collected by members of Group 31, or individuals working on behalf of Group 31, for subsequent distribution within the institutions. In addition, Group 31 smuggled illegal substances into the institutions using, among others: a) legal mail; b) family visits; c) official corruption/indifference; d) catapulting or throwing drugs into the prison yards (“picheos”); and e) hiding drugs inside other items entered into the prisons (i.e. PlayStations, remote controls, food items, and bags of ice).

9. Group 31 financed their enterprise through the sale and distribution of illegal substances within the institutions. Financial control and accounting for the enterprise was conducted by members of the organization in the free community. Payment for drug transactions generally did not occur within the institutions. Instead, members of the organization in the free community opened and maintained accounts in several banks and credit unions throughout Puerto Rico. Those members would send and receive payments for the illegal substances in cash, as well as through Automated Clearinghouse Credits (electronic payments that move money from one account to another).

10. Group 31 members benefited from a pattern of official corruption and/or indifference by employees in charge of the inmates. In limited circumstances, staff members participated in the introduction and distribution of illegal substances on behalf of Group 31. At other times, through indifference or improper acts, staff members allowed Group 31's illegal drug distribution operation to thrive, through, among other things: a) telling Group 31 members when law enforcement was present in an institution; b) providing favorable intelligence to Group 31; c) allowing Group 31 to operate its own disciplinary system; d) failing to document and report incidents as required by policy; and e) failing to register seized items into evidence as required by policy.

11. Group 31 members received privileges not afforded to other similarly situated prisoners housed in the same institutions. Those privileges included but were not limited to: a) special visiting hours; b) visits not authorized by prison regulations; c) the use of cellular telephones within the institutions; d) the use of PlayStation gaming consoles; e) the use of large screen televisions; and f) the use of Bluetooth earbuds.

12. Group 31 established its own disciplinary system within its ranks. Discipline of members, as well as some non-members, was handled by Group 31's hierarchy, or members appointed by the leadership. Disciplinary measures utilized by Group 31 included but were not limited to: a) beatings; b) forcing prisoners to sit with their arms crossed so that they could be beaten and kicked; c) withholding food; d) withholding drugs; and e) locking prisoners up and restraining their movement.

13. The use of illegal substances in penal institutions, including the illegal substances introduced by Group 31, was widespread and dangerous. Inherent issues with the use of illegal substances in prisons include the lack of any regulation as to the content of the illegal substances, in combination with a fear within the prison population to call for medical assistance if an issue occurs. In the time period relevant to this Indictment, the illegal substances introduced by Group 31 caused many overdoses and, at least, four overdose deaths attributed to a drug mixture containing fentanyl.

14. Group 31, as allowed by the Constitution of Puerto Rico, actively participated in elections. Members of Group 31 were instructed by the group's leadership what candidates to vote for during elections. Individuals that did not vote for the Group 31 backed candidates were subjected to retribution, including the withholding of illegal substances.

15. Group 31 communicated by means of contraband telephones and in writing. Group 31 maintained records to monitor the progress of the criminal enterprise, which included, but were not limited to: a) minutes of Group 31 meetings; b) drug ledgers; c) phone contact lists; and d) tally sheets.
